LEXICON OF RECONSTRUCTED PRONUNCIATION IN EARLY MIDDLE CHINESE, LATE MIDDLE CHINESE, AND EARLY MANDARIN

Known for his pioneering work in Chinese historical phonetics, Edwin Pulleyblank has compiled this Lexicon to present in convenient dictionary form the result of his researches on the phonology of Middle Chinese and its evolution to Mandarin.

The Lexicon complements Pulleyblank's earlier book, Middle Chinese, by providing reconstructed pronunciation for approximately 8,000 Chinese characters at three historical stages. Early Middle Chinese is the language of the Qieyun rhyme dictionary of A.D. 601, which codified the standard literary language of both North and South China, the preceding period of division. Pulleyblank's reconstruction is a thorough reworking of that of Bernhard Karlgren, completed in the twenties, and in some respects differs radically from it. Late Middle Chinese is the standard language of the High Tang Dynasty, based on the dialect of the capital, Chang'an. It has not been reconstructed previously as a separate stage but is of special importance, since it is the ancestor of most modern dialects. Early Mandarin represents the speech of the Yuan capital, Dadu (present Beijing), around the year 1300, for which Pulleyblank's reconstruction differs considerably from that of Hugh M. Stimson. The sources and methods used in these reconstructions were fully discussed in Middle Chinese, but recent developments in phonological theory have led to some modifications in detail.

The entries are arranged alphabetically according to the Pinyin system with an index by the traditional Kangxi radical and stroke numbers. The Morohashi number is also given for each character, enabling easy reference to this important Chinese thesaurus. Another useful feature of the Lexicon is the inclusion of the numbers in Karlgren's Grammata Serica for characters that are included in that work. Concise English equivalents for the Chinese words are also provided. Reconstructed forms are given in the International Phonetic Alphabet. Though this requires a number of phonetic signs and diacritical marks, these are carefully explained in the introduction.

Every effort has been made to provide a useful tool for students of Chinese literature and China's relations with foreign countries as well as for specialists in Chinese linguistics.

EDWIN G. PULLEYBLANK is Professor Emeritus of the Department of Asian Studies at the University of British Columbia. He is the author of Middle Chinese: A Study in Historical Phonology (1984).

The beginnings of this book go very far back and many people have contributed along the way. K'ai-ying Po T'ang, then a graduate student in the Department of Asian Studies, was employed with the help of a grant from the UBC President's Research Fund during one summer in the early seventies preparing index cards. The contribution of Dr. W. G. Boltz, now of the University of Washington, who spent a year at UBC in 1976-77, paid for by a grant from the Canada Council (now the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada) entering translation glosses (since much revised) on to the cards, should especially be mentioned. The next stage was the transfer of this material from cards to the UBC mainframe computer, using radical-stroke order and Morohashi numbers as the key to the Chinese characters, which it was not yet possible to input directly. This was done by Eliza Ko, a student in Computer Science, employed under the British Columbia/Canada Summer Employment Program, Challenge 85, and the Work-Study Program of the B.C. provincial government in 1985-86. An important breakthrough came with the transfer from the mainframe to a MacIntosh personal computer which provided much greater flexibility. Kenneth Szto was employed under the Work-Study program in 1986-87 to assist in the reformatting that this required. The final step was the obtaining of a Chinese font, the Qiyi 奇易 program produced by the Great Eastern Software Company Limited of Taipei, which has made it possible to input Chinese characters directly into the computer and to produce photo-ready copy for the production of the book. The tedious task of inserting the Chinese characters and converting my hand-made phonetic font to the Postscript font, IPATimes, was carried out by a research assistant, Elsie Arbuckle, with the assistance of a grant from the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada. I am also grateful for the assistance in formatting and proofreading the text that I have received from George Maddison and Jean Wilson of UBC Press.

The editing of the text at all stages and final preparation of the text for printing have, in the end, fallen to me and errors that remain are my own responsibility.

INTRODUCTION

The sounds of spoken language vanish as soon as they are uttered. Since the invention of the phonograph and more sophisticated electronic means of recording sound, it has become possible to overcome this limitation so that we can hear voices from the past speaking in their own accents. For earlier times, however, written records provide our only means of access to past utterances. Even for languages with syllabic or alphabetic scripts, this provides a very imperfect and incomplete mirror of what was said. Such is the coded nature of language that its message can be translated into written form even without the actual sound, so that the words of an ancient Greek bard or a Chinese philosopher which would seem utterly strange to us if we could actually hear them can reach us and convey their meaning across the centuries. Nevertheless, much is inevitably lost and there are many reasons why it is desirable to get closer to the contemporary sound of the speech of past centuries.

Even for languages written in phonetic scripts recovery of the pronunciation of bygone days is by no means easy. Language is in a constant state of flux and spellings become conventionalized and come to reflect obsolete usages. Moreover, in every culture written language develops its own conventions that move away from those of the vernacular. The written norm tends to become a separate code accessible only to the educated elite. The classical Latin of a Tacitus or a Pliny in the first century of our era was very different from the vulgar Latin that we find reflected in Petronius. The actual speech of Tacitus and the Plinys was presumably much closer. The problem of reconstructing the pronunciation of a language like Chinese whose script, though containing phonetic principles, has never corresponded in a simple and direct way to the sounds of the language is of a different order of magnitude. Some would say that it is an impossible task. Nevertheless, there are means available and through the efforts of scholars progress continues to be made.

The most important kind of evidence for getting access to the linguistic standards of specific historic periods of Chinese is provided by rhyming dictionaries that, without the use of alphabetic notation of any kind, were designed to give a key to contemporary pronunciation. This they did both by arranging the words according to their rhymes and by distinguishing within each rhyme words which were exact homophones, that is, which also had the same non-rhyming parts. The compilation of such dictionaries began in the period of division between Han and Tang but the earliest surviving example is the Qieyun 切韻, completed in 601 by Lu Fayan 陸法言 with the advice of a group of eminent scholars of the time. It is not quite accurate to call it a surviving example, since there is no complete text of the Qieyun in the form in which it left the hands of its compiler. It went through many re-editions and enlargements before it took final shape in the Guangyun 廣韻 or 'Enlarged Qieyun,' of 1008 which is now taken to represent it. Nevertheless, surviving manuscripts and manuscript fragments of dictionaries in the Qieyun tradition before the Guangyun make it clear that the basic structure of the rhymes and homophone groups of the original dictionary was maintained, so that it does provide a key to the phonological structure of the language that Lu Fayan and his colleagues intended to codify.

There has been much controversy as to what this language was that underlay the Qieyun. Since the work was compiled in Chang'an 長安 shortly after the founding of the Sui 隋 dynasty, Bernhard Karlgren, who first made a phonetic reconstruction of it on modern scientific principles, assumed that it must represent the contemporary dialect of that city. He thought that it became a koine for the whole country during the following Tang dynasty and hence the ancestor of most modern Chinese dialects. Others have argued that it did not reflect an actual single coherent spoken dialect but was a mixture of dialect forms current at that time. My own conclusion put forward in my book, Middle Chinese, following especially the work of Zhou Zumo 周祖謨, was that it did indeed represent a single, coherent, form of the Chinese language, namely the elite standard common to educated speakers from both north and south in the period of division that came to an end with the Sui reconquest of the south in 589. Ultimately this standard went back to the dialect of Luoyang 洛陽 in the second and third centuries. Though significant divergencies had developed by the sixth century between the speech of those who had remained in the north (particularly the northeast) and the descendants of the refugee aristocrats who had moved south at the fall of Western Jin 晉 early in the fourth century, it still constituted a recognized 'Mandarin' that was regarded as normative by such scholars as Yan Zhitui 顏之推 and Lu Fayan. I call this standard underlying the Qieyun Early Middle Chinese (EMC).

The prestige of Early Middle Chinese survived the reunification of the country for a time but soon began to be undermined by the growing prestige of a new standard based on the speech of the Sui-Tang capital, Chang'an, situated in an area that had been a cultural backwater during the time of division. While the rhymes of the Qieyun, somewhat simplified to take account of distinctions that were already becoming obsolete when the dictionary was completed, retained their authority for poetry written as part of the official examination system and have remained in use by those who write Regulated Verse (lüshi 律詩) down to the present day, evidence of the new Tang standard begins to appear already in the seventh century and it is clear that it was well established by the eighth. It led to the introduction of the new form of Sino-Japanese known as Kan'on 漢音 (Chinese sounds) as opposed to the older way of pronouncing Chinese characters which became known as Go'on 吳音 (Wu sounds). Wu (Go) here refers to the old southern capital at Jiankang 建康 (Nanking) and its surrounding territory, which had been the most prestigious cultural centre in the time of division and where the old EMC standard was presumably most persistent. In China itself Wu yin 吳音, pronunciation of Wu, now regarded as provincial and substandard, was contrasted with Qin yin 秦音, pronunciation of Qin, that is the region of Chang'an.

Dictionaries incorporating the new standard, which I call Late Middle Chinese (LMC), were compiled but unfortunately none has survived. Nevertheless, we have even better evidence for its phonological categories than we have for EMC. This comes not only from fanqie 反切 spellings based on such dictionaries found in the great compendium of glosses on the Buddhist canon, the Yiqiejing yinyi 一切經音義 of Huilin 慧琳, but also from the rhyme tables, a more sophisticated form of phonological analysis than that provided by dictionaries of the Qieyun type, which seems to have developed in Buddhist circles in late Tang times. Though the earliest complete rhyme table, the Yunjing 韻經, survives only in redactions of Southern Song date, there are manuscript fragments from Dunhuang 敦煌 dating from the ninth or tenth century that are clearly in the same tradition. The fact that the distinctions made by the Yunjing correspond closely to those of Huilin's fanqie and to other mid and late Tang evidence such as colloquial rhyming in poetry also testifies to the fact that Yunjing was based on LMC. It is this Tang standard that spread to the whole country and constituted the koine that Karlgren identified as the ancestor of modern dialects. It differed quite considerably from EMC, making many fewer distinctions. It is for this reason that one must insist on reconstructing it separately from the Qieyun.

After the fall of Tang, the capital again shifted and the standard language continued to evolve. Unfortunately, evidence for the language of Northern Song and its northern and southern successors, Jin and Southern Song, is sporadic and fragmentary. Dictionaries in the Qieyun tradition retained their prestige and though rhyme tables of the Yunjing tradition do show some evolution reflecting changes in the language, their basic structure remained that of LMC. A skeletal rhyme table reflecting eleventh-century phonology can be extracted from the Huangji jingshi 皇極經世 of Shao Yong 邵雍 but it is insufficient, even with the help of evidence from the rhyming of ci 詞 poetry, to make a satisfactory full reconstruction of the language of that period.

The situation changed dramatically with the advent of the Yuan dynasty. The coming of the Mongols, who established their capital in China at present Beijing, saw a great decrease in the prestige of the literary elite and the emergence of a vigorous literature based on the current vernacular language. Two important dictionaries were produced that reflect this form of speech. The first was the Menggu ziyun 蒙古字韻, a rhyme dictionary making use of the ḥP^hags-pa alphabet. Though it contains some artificial features that show the influence of the Chinese rhyme table tradition, it is clear that it basically reflects the current standard of the capital (Pulleyblank 1970). The second is the Zhongyuan yinyun 中原音韻, which was designed to be a guide for the rhyming of the form of poetry known as qǔ 曲 which was in use in popular drama of the period. A careful comparison of the two dictionaries shows that, although the Zhongyuan yinyun is slightly later and reflects a slightly more evolved form of language than the Menggu ziyun, the two are based on the same underlying dialect, which can be recognized as ancestral to the present dialect of Beijing, especially in its colloquial layer. I call this Early Mandarin (EM).

The reconstruction of Early Middle Chinese and Late Middle Chinese was treated in detail in my book Middle Chinese and that of Early Mandarin was presented in more summary fashion. The present work is designed to provide a key to these three reconstructions in the form of a Lexicon in which reconstructed forms are given for these three important stages of the language for some 8000 characters. It is hoped that this will be of use, not only to specialists in Chinese historical phonology, but also to non-specialists who wish to know the pronunciation of the language at various times in the past for other purposes such as appreciating the rhymes and other phonetic aspects of poetry or interpreting the transcriptions of foreign words transcribed in Chinese.

Phonetic transcriptions

Forms in present-day Mandarin (putonghua 普通話) are given in the standard pinyin 拼音 romanization, with one modification. Because of the difficulty of combining the umlauted vowel ü, which only occurs after l- and n-, with tone marks, it is replaced by the digraph yu.

Reconstructed forms are given in the International Phonetic Alphabet (IPA) and are intended to express as closely as possible the phonological structure in order to show the diachronic development from one historical stage to the next. Since IPA uses symbols and diacritics which do not form part of the regular English alphabet, I list below the special symbols that appear in my EMC, LMC, and EM reconstructions, as well as some English letters that have special uses in IPA, with explanations as to their phonetic meaning.

ǣ stands for a nonsyllabic form of the vowel [a]. The theory behind this is discussed in Middle Chinese. In Pulleyblank (1986a) it is called a laryngeal glide. I now think that pharyngeal is more accurate. It is found as the second element in diphthongs such as the off-glides in words like dear [dɪə], fair [fɛə], as pronounced in Southern British and other 'r-less' dialects of English. Similarly, the vowels in fur [fɜ] and far [fɑ] are considered to be structurally diphthongs /əǎ/ and /aǎ/, ending in pharyngeal glides. The same structures are assumed for the vowels [ɻ] and [ɑ] of Mandarin, as in gē 歌 'song' and fāng 方 'direction,' and have also been reconstructed for earlier forms of the language. While this is an important theoretical concept from the point of view of tracing the history of diachronic changes, there is a possibility of confusion, particularly in the case of the distinction between -ia, -ia, -ua, -ya, which stand for VV diphthongs in which the nuclear /a/ vowel retains its full value, and -iǎ, -iǎ, -uǎ, -yǎ, in which -ǎ is phonetically a shwa-like off-glide. I have therefore eliminated ǎ as a symbol in the forms given in the Lexicon. Following the vowel -a, where its phonetic effect is to produce the back unrounded vowel [ɑ], it is simply omitted. In other cases, that is, after mid or high vowels where it is phonetically realized as a shwa-like off-glide, it is replaced by ǝ. This change in symbols is intended merely as a practical help for indicating the probable phonetic output and I continue to use ǎ when discussing phonological theory.

a: In Middle Chinese vowel length, which is a feature in both EMC and LMC, was indicated by doubling: aa, ee, œœ. In the Lexicon I have used instead the standard IPA symbol. This is largely a matter of convenience and doubling could be used if preferred.

ç This modified form of c, which also occurs in the combinations tç and tç^h, represents a palatal fricative as in Mandarin xī 西 [çi] 'west.' A typographical alternative, used, for example, by Karlgren, is ś.

ε Greek epsilon representing the lower-mid-front vowel of Mandarin tiān 天 [t^hjen] 'heaven'. From a theoretical point of view it is important to distinguish it from the higher-mid-front vowel [e] found, for example, in Mandarin gěi 给 [kei] 'give.' While the latter arises, both in Mandarin and Cantonese through the assimilation of a shwa vowel to a following high front glide: /əj/ → [ei], ε has the intrinsic feature [+low]. Diachronically it has arisen through the fronting of the vowel /a/, as in the shift of EM kjan 間 'space' to Mandarin jiān [tçjen], or the fusion of the diphthong /ia/ in LMC t^hian 天 'heaven,' EM t^hjen (see below). Since it never contrasts with e in the forms of Chinese under discussion, it would be possible for practical purposes to substitute e for it without ambiguity in EMC or EM forms but I have retained ε for the sake of uniformity in representing the distinctive features involved.

ə The inverted e, or shwa stands for the central vowel in Mandarin gēn 根 [kən] 'root.'

ǝ The off-glide found in the combinations əǎ, iǎ, iǎ, uǎ, yǎ. See above under ǎ.

ɣ Voiced velar fricative, reconstructed as an initial in EMC. N.B. ɣ must be distinguished from the symbol ɣ (not used in the reconstructed forms in the Lexicon) which stands for the vowel in Mandarin gē [kɤ] 歌 'song.'

^h The diacritic ' was used in Middle Chinese to represent voiceless aspiration but is replaced here by raised ^h, the preferred IPA symbol. It avoids possible confusion with ' , the sign for glottalization. Besides its occurrence in the voiceless aspirates k^h, t^h, p^h, ts^h, etc., ^h is used in EMC to represent the final aspiration which I believe characterized the Departing Tone at that period.

fi Voiced fi is reconstructed as a component of the 'muddy' initials kfi-, xfi-, tfi-, trfi-, pfi-, ffi-, tsfi-, sfi-, tʃfi-, ʃfi- of LMC, which are assumed to have been similar to the corresponding initials in some present-day Wu dialects, that is, having voiceless onset with voiced aspiration or murmur at their release, spreading through the following syllable. Alternatively one could adopt a convention of writing these initials as gh-, ʏh-, dh-, bh-, vh-, dzh-, zh-, dzh- (or dʒh-), ʒh- (or ʒh), like the 'voiced aspirates' of Indian languages which resemble them phonologically.

H Fully voiced laryngeal onset functioning phonologically as a consonant in syllable structure as in French h-aspiré (Pulleyblank 1986a). In Beijing Mandarin this underlying initial is frequently replaced by a frictionless velar continuant or glide [ɰ] (which is sometimes written as [ɣ] though the latter is strictly speaking a voiced fricative) or, less frequently, the velar nasal [ŋ], and in many Mandarin dialects it is always represented by [ŋ]. Present-day Cantonese also regularly substitutes [ŋ] for this 'zero initial.' Though it is an important structural feature of LMC and EM, as well as modern Mandarin, for the sake of simplicity H is omitted in the transcriptions in this Lexicon.

i Barred i stands for a high central unrounded vowel as found, for example, in Vietnamese. In Middle Chinese it is reconstructed for EMC contrasting with the high front vowel i and the high back-rounded vowel u both as an independent nucleus and as the first element in the diphthong ia. In the present work it is also reconstructed in place of retroflex -ɻ as the second element in the diphthongs -ɔi and -ai (see below), replacing the retroflex vowels -ɛɻ- and -aɻ-. Such diphthongs are found in Tai dialects and other Southeast Asian languages. For discussion see below.

j This stands in IPA for a high front glide, like consonantal y- in English which is often used in place of it in North American linguistic usage. It is important to distinguish clearly between ja, which is a sequence of the glide j + the vowel a, and the diphthong ia, which is a sequence of two fully syllabic vowels, equivalent in timing to the long vowel ai.

ɔ A lower mid back rounded vowel like that in Cantonese 多 [ɔ:] 'many' or that in English long (though this is unrounded for many American speakers), reconstructed for EMC and the new version of EM presented here. Like the corresponding front vowel ɛ, it contains the feature [+low] and arose historically in Chinese from the fusion of the diphthong /ua/ or the rounding of the low vowel /a/. It is therefore important to distinguish it clearly from the higher mid vowel [o] in diachronic statements. There is, however, no contrast between ɔ and o in EMC or EM and one could substitute o for ɔ without ambiguity for practical purposes.

œ: A lower mid front rounded vowel like that in Cantonese 𪛗 [tsʰœŋ] 'long,' reconstructed for the late, northern, form of EMC in use in early Tang. It has no short counterpart in EMC.

r In LMC and EM r corresponds to the retroflex r of Modern Mandarin. It may have had slightly more friction than the retroflex [ɻ] of American English, since it is represented by ʒ in Tibetan transcription but it was phonologically a sonorant, not an obstruent. Compare the use of j, phonetically [ʒ], in the standard French romanization system for Chinese, also adopted in the English Wade-Giles system. It is also found in EMC and LMC as the second element in the affricates tr, tr^h, dr, trfi, nr, which were single segments and not biphonemic clusters. Compare tr as pronounced in Southern Vietnamese or English tr- as in train, which is phonetically an affricate. During Song times tr- and tr^h- merged with the sibilant retroflex affricates tʂ- and tʂ^h-. Compare the merger of tr- with ch- [tʃ] in Northern Vietnamese and the substitution of [tʃ] for [tr] in childish pronunciation of English. The affricated pronunciation of nr- persisted in some varieties of LMC, in which nasals were regularly pronounced as prenasalized stops, but in most modern dialects nr- has merged with n- and the retroflex feature has left no trace. It is likely that such a merger had already occurred in some varieties of LMC.

ɻ Raised r was used in the EMC reconstruction as presented in Middle Chinese as a mark of retroflexion for vowels. In the present work this is replaced by ɻ as the second element of the diphthongs ɔɻ and ai. See below.

ʂ Retroflex fricative as in Mandarin shān [ʂan] 'mountain.' May also be written ʂ. It is also found in the affricates tʂ, tʂ^h, tʂfi.

ʋ A labiodental frictionless approximant, as found, for example, in Dutch where it is distinct from the voiced labiodental fricative [v]. It is found in Mandarin as a frequent variant of initial [w] and is reconstructed as an initial phoneme for LMC and EM. One could write v- instead of ʋ- without ambiguity provided that the muddy labiodental obstruent of LMC is written ffi- or vh-.

x A voiceless velar fricative as in Mandarin hǎo [xaw] 'good.'

y The high front rounded vowel of Mandarin nǚ 女 'woman' or German Nüss 'nut.'

ɥ The corresponding glide (semivowel) in French huit [ɥi] 'eight' or Cantonese 女 [nøɥ] 'woman.'

ʒ Voiced counterpart of the palatal fricative ɕ found in EMC, also as the fricative component of the affricate dʒ. Written ʒ by Karlgren.

ʐ Voiced retroflex fricative found as a marginal phoneme in EMC and as the second element in the affricate dʐ. Written ʐ by Karlgren.

ˊ Sign of glottalization used to mark the Rising Tone in EMC.

As noted above, the Rising and Departing Tones of EMC are marked by syllable final -ˊ and -ˋ respectively. For LMC tones are marked by ˊ (Rising Tone) and ˋ (Departing Tone) placed after the end of the syllable. For EM, which had essentially the same tonal system as modern Mandarin, a similar convention is used, using ˊ for the Yǎngpíng Tone (Mandarin Tone 2), ˊˊ for the Rising Tone (Mandarin Tone 3) and ˋ for the Departing Tone (Mandarin Tone 4).

Changes in Reconstruction (a) Early Mandarin

In Middle Chinese it was assumed that the long vowel -a- of LMC (there written -aa-) shortened to -a- in EM and the corresponding VV diphthongs -ia-, -ua-, -ya- also reduced to a single syllabic element, either by changing the first V to a glide (in syllables ending in -ǎŋ, i.e. a pharyngealized velar nasal), or by changing the second V, syllabic -a-, to a glide -ǎ-. In a later article (Pulleyblank 1986a) it was argued that a better solution, more in keeping with evidence of contemporary pronunciation, was to assume that, when closed by -n, -m and -w, the diphthongs fused to corresponding low vowels, -ia- → -ɛ-, -ua- → -ɔ-, -ya- → -œ-, a stage reflected in ʰPhags-pa orthography. Thereafter, -ɛ- developed a palatal onglide, merging with -je- from LMC -jia-, while -œ- became -ɥɛ-, also merging with LMC -jya- which had already developed to -ɥɛ- at the ʰPhags-pa stage. This is the stage represented by the Zhongyuan yinyun.. This solution was not, however, extended to corresponding syllables ending in -t and -p, which lost their stop endings between LMC and EM, nor to the syllables reconstructed as ending with -ǎ with which they merged.

On further reflection it has become clear that a simpler solution that agrees better with the contemporaneous evidence for the pronunciation of EM is to assume that there was no final -ǎ glide in EM and that the VV syllables reconstructed for LMC in -ǎ (as well as those in -t, and -p which were also lost in EM) followed the same course as the corresponding finals in -n, -m, -w: -a: → -a, -ia → -ɛ, -ua → -ɔ, -ya → -œ → -ɥɛ. After coronal initials, finals in short -aa, -at, -ap merged with -ɔ from LMC -ua and remained distinct from EM -a derived from LMC -aa, -aat, -aap. This implies that short -a rounded to -ɔ before the shortening of VV syllables. It is also necessary to suppose that LMC -ua labialized preceding velar stops and fricatives: LMC kuaǎ → kua → EM kwɔ, which remained distinct from LMC kaă → ka → EM kɔ. These changes in EM reconstruction have been incorporated into the Lexicon.

A further detail about the reconstruction of EM that must be mentioned is that I now assume that the glide -j- was everywhere lost after retroflex initials and that the glide -ɥ- was depalatalized to -w- in the same environment. I therefore write, for example, EM ʂem̐ (not ʂjem̐) for shǎn 陝 (compare the old transcription Shensi of the name of the province of Shaanxi 陝西) and EM ʂwɛ̐ (not ʂɥɛ̐) for shuō 說.

The open front and back rounded vowels, -ɛ and -ɔ, of EM are still found in southerly Mandarin dialects but in the Beijing dialect a structural requirement for a final -ǎ glide after non-high vowels has reappeared. EM open -je and -ɥe have become structurally -jəǎ and -ɥəǎ, while -ɔ has become -əǎ after velars and -wəǎ after coronals. A fuller discussion must be reserved for another occasion.

The following is a summary of the initials and finals of the Zhongyuan yinyun as presented in this Lexicon.

TONES

Upper Level – unmarked; Lower Level – ˊ; Rising – ˋ; Departing – ˋ. The old Entering Tone had been lost in EM and the syllables were redistributed over Lower Level (LMC voiced aspirate initials, Rising (LMC voiceless initials, except ʔ), and Departing (LMC sonorant initials and ʔ).

Changes in Reconstruction (b) Late Middle Chinese

As noted above, the final -ǎ glide in the Guo and Jia rhyme groups is omitted in the forms given in the Lexicon. It must, in any case, have been lost quite early in the evolution towards EM. Since such a final glide is required to account for the parallel between these rhyme groups and the Dang groups in the history of Cantonese (Pulleyblank 1991), it seems likely that there were different dialectal varieties of LMC. The glide ǎ is also omitted as a mark of pharyngealization before the velar finals of the Dang group. It is retained before the velar endings of the Zeng group, where it accounts for the Kan'on representation of the finals -iǎŋ and -iǎk (now written -iǎŋ, -iǎk) as -you and -yoku.

Final -ǎ (rewritten as -ǎ) is retained in the Yu rhyme group, where it must have been present as long as the kaikou and hekou finals were distinct and constituted a single rhyme group, since otherwise -iǎ would have merged with the -i rhyme group. Some colloquial rhyming from the ninth century suggests that this did in fact occur in some dialects. There is other evidence that in another form of LMC which eventually became dominant the kaikou finals -ǎǎ, -iǎ were already not distinct from the corresponding hekou finals -uǎ, -yǎ in Tang times (Middle Chinese p.108). Modern dialects are almost all descended from this latter variety of LMC and I have therefore indicated this as an alternative LMC reconstruction in the Lexicon, thus: -ǎǎ/-uǎ, -iǎ/yǎ.

(a) Open -a

The final glide -ǎ as a syllable closure after the vowel -a in the absence of another consonant or glide is omitted in transcription for EMC as well as LMC. The extent to which such a glide was actually present at this, and earlier, stages of the language remains to be determined.

(b) Retroflex vowels

The retroflex vowels -ɛʳ- and -aʳ- were reconstructed for EMC corresponding to Grade II of the rhyme tables of the Yunjing tradition. In LMC these vowels merged as long -aɪ-. The reconstruction of such a long vowel for LMC is supported by the overall syllabic structure of that language, which is assumed to have also had the VV diphthongs -ia-, -ua-, -ya- as well as the single V nuclei, -ə-, -a-, -i-, -u-, -y-. The same basic syllable structure is also postulated for EMC, which also had the VV diphthongs -ia-, -ia-, -ua-. It was assumed that in the penultimate stage of the form of EMC out of which LMC developed the two retroflex vowels had merged as long -ɛɪ-, which developed a preceding palatal glide and then defronted to -aɪ-. Direct evidence for such a front vowel at this stage is found in colloquial Min dialects, as well as Go'on and the pre-Sino-Vietnamese strata of loanwords in Vietnamese.

The question at issue is the nature of the Grade II finals at the earlier stage of EMC when the two types of rhymes were still distinct. Since they gave rise to VV finals in LMC, we should expect them to have already had such a structure, which is not implied simply by the marking of the retroflex feature. One way to account for this would be to suppose that the retroflex feature constituted, not a feature modification of a single V element, as implied by the transcriptions -ɛʳ- and -aʳ-, but a second V element which could be symbolized by writing vocalic -ɾ- on the line instead of raised -ɾ̥, thus: -ɛɾ-, -aɾ-. This would not be an economical solution, however, since syllabic ɾ does not occur otherwise in EMC phonology. To write simply -ɾ- would also be objectionable, since it would imply the possibility of CC clusters in syllable codas, something that is otherwise excluded.

I now think that a better solution is to identify the 'retroflex' feature with the vowel i, which already plays a role in EMC phonology, both as an independent nuclear vowel and as the first element in the diphthong ia. Diphthongs of the type ai with this vowel as the second element are found in the Tai dialects of Lungchow and Po-ai and are reconstructed for Common Tai by F. K. Li (Li 1977). Common Tai, like Vietnamese, has strong typological similarities to EMC probably resulting from the areal influence from China to which it was subjected before and during the first millennium of the present era (Pulleyblank 1986b). I now replace the retroflex vowels -ɛʳ- and -aʳ- with the diphthongs -əi-, -ai-. I assume that -əi- first lowered to -ai- after which -i- was subject to the same fronting rule that has already been assumed for changing EMC -i- and -ia- to LMC -i- and -ia-: -ai- →

-ai-. Note that Lungchow and Po-ai ai correspond to ai in Siamese (Li 1977: 289). The VV diphthong -ai- then fused to the long monophthong -ɛi-.

There is a strong acoustic affinity between retroflexion and back unrounded vowels (Pulleyblank 1989) and it makes good sense to suppose that the r-umlaut in Type A syllables which had the effect of throwing the r-feature from initial r-clusters forward to the end of the syllable should have resulted in this type of diphthong. A back unrounded element in the nucleus would also have been acoustically appropriate for representing retroflexion in transcriptions of Sanskrit, which provided one of the principal pieces of evidence for reconstructing retroflex vowels. A further point is the merger of *-riaj from the Old Chinese *-aj rhyme category and *-iaj from the Old Chinese *-al category to form the EMC final -iǎ (Grade III) that is discussed in Middle Chinese, pp.171 ff. It was there suggested that, before -i-, medial -r- was replaced by a velar onglide: -ri- → -ɣ- which was later lost but not before it had prevented the emergence of a palatal onglide by the general rule that applied to front vowels in EMC: *-i- → EMC -ji-, but *-i- → EMC -i-, resulting in the chóngniǔ contrast between Grade IV and Grade III. While in the Inner finals a three-way contrast survived in EMC among the reflexes of the Old Chinese *-əj and *-əl groups between -i-, -ji, and -ij, there was a merger in the corresponding Outer finals between *-iaj from the *-al group and -iaj from the *-aj group which both became EMC -iǎ (Grade III) in contrast to -jiǎ (Grade IV) which came exclusively from *-iaj in the *-aj group.

(c) The vowel o

In Middle Chinese the LMC finals -əw, -əwŋ, -əwk were reconstructed as -ow, -owŋ, -owk. This vowel does not occur otherwise in EMC and comparison with other forms of Chinese suggests that -əw- would in any case have been pronounced with a rounded vowel by assimilation of the shwa vowel to the following glide. The arguments that led me to think that there was a stage at which the underlying vowel was rounded (p.182 ff.) no longer seem compelling. The surface rounding, together with the following glide, was no doubt what led to the rhyming with -uw, -uwŋ, -uwk. The development of these finals from Old Chinese will be discussed more fully elsewhere.

(d) Rhyming in EMC

There are a number of ways in which the forms as reconstructed here may not appear to give good exact rhymes within the tongyong categories.

(i) The finals əw, uw, and iw rhyme freely together. So also do the pairs of finals əwŋ, uwŋ and əwk, uwk which are included within the same Qieyun rhymes. This may be compared to the rhyming of [əŋ] [iŋ] [uŋ] in Mandarin. In EMC, however, it contrasts with the separate rhyming of ən, in, and un. It is probably to be explained by the acoustic effect of the following w-glide, which would have rounded a preceding shwa vowel to [o].

(ii) Finals with nuclear /a/ and final palatalized velars also matched differently in rhyming from corresponding finals in -n, -t, -m, -p, -j. For many poets all such finals could rhyme together, presumably because of the preponderant acoustic effect of the following palatal glide. The treatment of $\epsilon\eta$ and ϵjk as a separate duyong category that is specified in the Guangyun remains unexplained. Perhaps the short vowel [ɛ] was phonetically somewhat higher, closer to [e], when followed by a palatal glide.

(iii) Unrounded i and back rounded u could, in general, rhyme freely together. Hence in and un, ian and uan, iat and uat, iam and uam, iap and uap, could interrhyime. The Guangyun is inconsistent in specifying it and ut as duyong but we seldom find this exemplified in actual rhyming practice of the seventh century or earlier. The nuclear vowel /a/ was probably somewhat raised phonetically by a preceding i or u, hence the interrhyiming of ian and uan with ən , and iat and uat with ət .

(iv) In the case of the diphthong ia (except when followed by pharyngealized velars) there was no doubt fronting as well as raising. Hence the rhyming of - ϵj , - ϵw , - ϵn , - ϵt , - ϵm , - ϵp with -iaj, -iaw, -ian, -iat, -iam, -iap. Compare Mandarin [-jen] which rhymes with [-an] [-wan] [-ɣan] and is written -ian in pinyin. While one could unambiguously write i ϵj , i ϵw , i ϵn , i ϵt , i ϵm , i ϵp for these finals if rhyming were the main issue, the spellings iaj, iaw, etc. correspond better to the underlying structure and are therefore better for representing the diachronic development.

(v) The interrhyiming of the Grade II final -ai/ɛ: and the Grade III final -ia that are all included in the Qieyun ma 麻 rhyme is confirmed by poetic practice at all periods. Up to the latter part of the fifth century, these finals also rhymed with the finals -a, -wa, -ia, -ua, of the ge 歌 rhyme but this is consistent with the general rule that the retroflex, or centralized, finals of Grade II did not yet form separate rhyming categories. After the fronting of -ai to -ɛi, interrhyiming can be accounted for by allophonic fronting of -ia to [iæ] or [iɛ], as in the case of -ian [iɛn], etc.

(vi) Rhymes 登 and 蒸, reconstructed here as $\text{ə}\eta$ and $\text{i}\eta$, and the corresponding Entering Tone rhymes, are treated as tóngyǒng in the Guangyun, though they are kept apart in pre-Tang rhyming practice and even in the seventh century by many poets. Their merger probably reflects the shift towards LMC in which the final velars were pharyngealized, giving an audible off-glide to the vowel which brought the finals closer together: $\text{ə}\check{\text{ə}}\eta$, $\text{ə}\check{\text{ə}}k$, $\text{i}\check{\text{ə}}\eta$, $\text{i}\check{\text{ə}}k$. I have not thought it necessary to indicate this late change in my EMC reconstruction.

FINALS in Level and Entering Tones arranged by tongyong and duyong groups of the Guangyun. For the sake of clarity medial glides are included with the finals. Forms after slashes show the mergers that had taken place by the beginning of Tang when the tongyong and duyong groups came into use in poetic rhyming. Finals in Rising and Departing Tones correspond to those in Level Tone, except in the case of rhymes 泰 aj^h, waj^h, 濟 iaj^h/jiaj^h, jiaj^h/jwiaj^h, 夬 aij^h(s)/ɛij^h, waij^h(s)/wɛij^h, 廢 iaj^h, uaj^h, which only occurred in Departing Tone. All these rhymes still ended in -s in the southern dialect at the beginning of the sixth century (Pulleyblank 1979). Though -s was lost by the time of the Qieyun, it is placed in parentheses in rhyme 夬 aij^h(s)/ɛij^h, waij^h(s)/wɛij^h to distinguish it from rhyme 佳 aij/ɛij, waij/wɛij with which it was otherwise identical.

Modern Readings

The Lexicon is intended as a key to pre-modern readings, not to current pronunciation. Nevertheless it is obviously desirable to record modern readings as accurately as possible, not only because the entries are arranged according to them but also because it is of interest from a historical point of view to note cases in which modern readings show irregular development. In the majority of cases the current pronunciation is well established and easily ascertained in standard dictionaries but there is a sizeable minority of cases in which problems arise. These are of several different kinds.

One such case is where a graph traditionally had a reading pronunciation that differed from the corresponding colloquial word. In other cases a pronunciation showing the expected regular development may be recorded in dictionaries as an 'old reading' or 'alternative reading' along with a more common reading that differs from it, often only in tone. My practice has been to include both pronunciations, distinguished by the letters a and b after the Morohashi number. It would, no doubt, have been desirable to mark the reading and colloquial pronunciations as such but evidence for establishing this is not always readily available and it has only been done in a minority of cases.

Another related but slightly different case is where two old readings of a graph that were still kept apart until recent times have merged in current usage. For instance, 使 formerly had two readings, shǐ as the verb 'to send; cause, make to do' and shì as the noun 'envoy.' In current usage shǐ is used for both. The reading shì is given as an alternative reading for the latter meaning in the Hanyu cidian, based on the Guoyu cidian, published by the Commercial Press in 1937, but has disappeared from more recent dictionaries such as the Xiandai Hanyu cidian (1978), the Chinese English Dictionary of the Commercial Press (1979), or the Ciyuan (1987). The new multivolume Hanyu daqīdiǎn distinguishes the two words, giving their Guangyun fanqie, but reads both as shǐ without comment. Only the Hanyu daqidian gives shì as an 'old reading' for the meaning 'envoy.'

Another example is 治 which had two EMC readings, dri/dri (Level Tone) and dri^h/dri^h (Departing Tone). The first, which gives Mandarin chí by regular development, was a transitive verb 'set in order, govern.' The second, which gives Mandarin zhì, referred to the resultant state, 'well-ordered, governed.' In current usage zhì is used for both meanings. The reading chí is recorded in its old meaning as a reading pronunciation in the Hanyu cidian but is not found in the Xiandai Hanyu cidian or the Chinese English Dictionary and in the Ciyuan (1987) it is recorded only as a surname and the name of a river. The same is true of the Hanyu daizidian. The new Hanyu dacidian lists the level tone and departing tone fanqie from the Guangyun under the single modern reading zhì without reference to the distinction in meaning. Since it seems more important in a work directed towards the history of language to record what was until recently the living tradition than to be up-to-date, I have generally used the Hanyu cidian as an authority for modern readings in spite of the fact that it is over fifty years old.

Paradoxically, though the large new dictionaries omit readings that were current at least for some people within living memory, they have no hesitation in supplying modern Mandarin pronunciations on the basis of ancient sound equations or fanqie for words that have been obsolete for centuries. The graph 𩇛 standing for an old word which meant a horse's head ornament is read fàn in 1965 edition of the Cihai, apparently on the basis of the statement in the Shuowen that the right hand part was 'read like fàn 范.' On the other hand, the Ciyuan reads it as wǎn which is the expected modern reading corresponding to the fanqie of the Guangyun. It is, of course, necessary to have some way of giving a modern reading to obsolete words found in old texts but one can be sure that neither pronunciation of 𩇛 represents a living tradition. From a historical point of view it would be desirable to distinguish such artificial readings from those that are truly inherited through the spoken language. It would, however, be very difficult to do so in a consistent and reliable way. There is, in fact, no clear dividing line between such extreme cases of readings invented or recreated by dictionary makers and readings of words from the old literary language that may have a certain currency among the educated in set phrases but seem clearly to be based on graphic analogy rather than natural evolution through the vernacular.

A special kind of problem is presented by readings of graphs used in old transcriptions of foreign words. Ideally one wishes to use such transcriptions as clues to the pronunciation of the foreign word at the time the transcription was made and the modern Mandarin pronunciation is strictly irrelevant. Establishing the ancient pronunciation of the graph in Chinese is only the first step in the process, though it may be as far as one can go in many cases, especially when the transcription is from a language that is otherwise unknown. The matter is not infrequently complicated by commentaries that give special sound equations or fanqie spellings for graphs used in such transcriptions. The general question of how to deal with Chinese transcriptions of foreign words is a complicated problem that deserves a much more extended discussion than can possibly be attempted here. It arises in the present connection, however, through the need to assign Mandarin readings to graphs in old transcriptions that have a certain currency, at least among academics. Let me give a few illustrative examples.

The graph 迦, now pronounced jiā, is found almost exclusively in Buddhist transcriptions where it represents the Indian (Sanskrit or Prakrit) syllables ka or kā. In the Guangyun it has the reading E. kia which according to the expected regular development ought to give Mandarin jiē. Compare qié 茄 'eggplant' from E. gia. It is very likely that the modern reading jiā is analogical, based on the phonetic component, jiā 加. The Guangyun does include a second reading for 迦, homophonous with that of jiā 加, in Jiāyè 迦葉, originally a transcription of Kaśyapa, the name of one of Buddha's disciples, but known in Tang China as a two-character surname. It is likely that even here it was an analogical reading resulting from the fact that there was no native word in current use pronounced E. kia. An even clearer case is that of 佉, the corresponding transcription character for Indian kha or khā, read E. k^hia in the Guangyun, which is now pronounced qū instead of the expected qiē, evidently by analogy with qù 去. It would, of course, be highly artificial to insist on reading 迦 and 佉 as jiē and qiē.

A reverse situation arises when modern scholars invent readings with little or no ancient authority in order to fit a theory. Thus it has recently become the practice in China to read the Tang dynasty name of Tibet, 吐蕃, as Tǔbō instead of the traditional reading Tǔfān still found, for instance, in the Xiandai Hanyu cidian (1978). I assume that the motivation behind this innovation is to find a reading which will be closer to the Tibetans' own name for their country, Bod. As far as I can discover, however, there is no early authority for a Middle Chinese reading for the character 蕃 that could give rise to a modern reading bō. The Hanyu dazidian gives a reading bō confined to the name 吐蕃, but provides no fanqie. It merely quotes a passage from the Xin Tangshu which states that the Tǔfān were originally descended from the Western Qiang 西羌 including, among others, the Fa Qiang 發羌. It then goes on to say that, because the sounds of fān and fā were close (蕃發聲近), the descendants were called 吐蕃. Now it is true that fā 發 EMC puat looks very much like a transcription of the word Bod and it seems clear that the Song Qi 宋祁 or whoever was responsible for the Xin Tangshu passage, recognized this and sought to use it as an explanation for the name 吐蕃, but the problem of accounting for the substitution of 蕃 for 發, as claimed, remains. According to the Guangyun, 蕃 has the EMC readings puan and buan, the first of which, especially, could be called 'close' to 發 EMC puat. But neither 蕃 nor any of the graphs in the same phonetic series has a Middle Chinese reading in -t. 番, without the grass radical, which is normally read fān from EMC p^huan, does have a reading bō, representing EMC pa, in the expression bōbō 'with a martial air' from the Shijing, and this seems to be the source of the supposed reading bō for 蕃 in 吐蕃, but an EMC reading pa is neither as close to EMC puat as the normal readings of 蕃 nor a plausible transcription of Bod. The origin of the name Tüfān and its relation to Bod (or Bon ?) is an intriguing puzzle but it is difficult to see how changing the modern reading to Tübō contributes to its solution. The whole enterprise seems to be on the same level as the scholastic invention of special readings of characters to improve the rhyming of the Shijing that was practised in the Song dynasty.

Old Chinese

No reconstruction for Old Chinese is included in this Lexicon. This is because I do not believe that it is possible at present to offer any complete reconstruction for stages of the language earlier than the Qieyun. The rhyming in early poetry provides a set of categories for the finals but they are subject to many more ambiguities than the rhymes of a rhyming dictionary. For the initials there is not even this much in the way of a closed system. Nevertheless, there are promising developments, especially, in my view, the hypothesis that the twenty-two calendrical signs known as the Heavenly Stems and Earthly Branches originated as phonograms for the initial consonants of the language. Progress is also being made in unravelling the morphological processes that lie behind the phenomenon known as 'word families,' that is, sets of words related both in sound and meaning that is such an obvious feature of the Old Chinese lexicon. Exploitation of such evidence to compile a proper etymological dictionary of the language still lies in the future, however.

Key to the Lexicon

1. Entries are arranged in alphabetical order by the modern pronunciation in pinyin romanization.

2. Each character is followed by the number of its radical and the number of additional strokes according to the Kangxi zidian and by its serial number according to the Morohashi Dai kanwa jiten preceded by the letter M.

3. If more than one ancient reading is included for the character, this is indicated by the addition of a capital letter after the Morohashi number, e.g. cháng 長 168:0 M41100A. Separate entries will be found at the appropriate places for zhàng 長 168:0 M41100B and zhǎng 長 168:0 M41100C. Each of these entries has different EMC and LMC readings.

4. If two or more modern readings have to be referred to the same ancient reading, this is indicated by the addition of a lower case letter after the Morohashi number, e.g. cháng 場 32:9 M05278a and chǎng 場 32:9 M05278b, which have different meanings in modern usage but both have to be referred to the only attested EMC reading dian.

5. Reconstructed readings come next, in the following order: Early Mandarin (prefixed by the letter Y for Yuan), Late Middle Chinese (prefixed by the letter L), Early Middle Chinese (prefixed by the letter E). As far as possible modern homonyms are arranged so as to place together words which were also homophones at earlier stages in the order EM, LMC, and EMC, though this may be disturbed by irregular developments.

6. Yuan readings are based, where possible, on the Zhongyuan yinyun. This sometimes entails the inclusion of alternative readings separated by commas. Where a graph does not appear in the Zhongyuan yinyun, the reconstructed reading is placed in square brackets.

7. For L readings of words beginning with labial fricatives two readings are given separated by a slash. The first represents the earliest stage, attested by some Sino-Vietnamese and, more rarely, Sino-Japanese forms, in which medial -y- was retained. The second represents the stage represented by modern dialects and by most of the other early evidence in which this medial was already lost. E.g. fā 發 L. fjyat/faat, fēng 風 L. fjywn/fuwn, fēi 妃 L. fjyj/fji. Similarly words in the kaikou division of the Yu 禺 rhyme group (corresponding to the Yu 魚 rhyme category of the Qieyun), which had already shifted to hekou in many LMC dialects (see above) are given two readings separated by a slash, e.g. shū 疏 L. ʃəʔ/ʃuʔ, yú 魚 L. ŋjəʔ/ŋyʔ.

8. Where two E readings are given separated by slashes, the first represents the stage at which the full range of distinctions of the Qieyun was applicable. The second represents the later stage in the seventh century that is implied by the tongyong rhyming categories, e.g. chī 咎 E. tr^{hi}/tr^{hi} (from rhyme 之), chī 擗 E. tr^{hi}əʔ/tr^{hi} (from rhyme 支), and chī 緝 E. tr^{hi} (from rhyme 脂) which were distinct rhymes in the Qieyun but were treated as a single rhyme in Tang lǔshi poetry.

9. If the character is included in Karlgren's Grammata Serica Recensa, the serial number in that dictionary is given, preceded by the letter K.

10. It should be emphasized that the aim of the Lexicon is to give reconstructed pronunciations, not to compile a dictionary of literary Chinese. The English glosses that are provided are not intended to be exhaustive nor are they distinguished by date or reference to texts in which they occur. Strictly modern colloquial meanings have generally been omitted as irrelevant to the historical purpose of the Lexicon but have been referred to occasionally where it seems desirable for the sake of clarity.

				dried sweets. This graph is now considered to be an error for 錫, also pronounced táng, E. dāŋ, 'sugar'. A reading E. ziaǵġ would be highly irregular for the xiesheng series of 易, while the derivatives of 易 have similar initials and belong to the same Old Chinese rhyme category, except that they end in stops or glides instead of a nasal. Traditional versions of the Shuowen and available early texts of the Qieyun tradition support the view that 錫 is correct.
