

was already defeated and captured by [Shi Jilong]." It happened [exactly] as he said.¹¹

It becomes apparent that both Liu Yao and Shi Le moved their armies as chess pieces during the fateful campaign of 329 C.E. Therefore, there seems to be little room for a doubt that Xiong-nu *suke as well as Chinese 軍 means "armies" rather than "army," and the usage of plural subject agreement markers in the Xiong-nu poem is justified.

Therefore, I believe that Pulleyblank must be praised for his important discovery of the genetic affiliation of Xiong-nu that he has made more than thirty years ago on the basis of much more limited materials than the ones we have at our disposal today, which further support his ideas.
